General Comment

I can see no reason whatsoever to not continue to allow consumers to sell options on stocks they hold in their retirement/IRA accounts. I understand this proposed rule will prohibit myself and others from selling call options in my accounts. This is not a high risk strategy as I am only allowed to SELL options on stocks I own. I use this as a means to potentially increase my earnings, not speculation and it is not marginable. Please take this out of the proposed rule change.

Sincerely,
Daniel Marra
